Written Communication Standards- Public Relations Graduates

Definition: Written communication is a core skill for PR professionals at all levels of career advancement. This refers to the development and expression of ideas in written English. In public relations, it involves the establishment of a purpose for the written communication, identifying audiences, researching topics, formulating messages, choosing media, selecting writing styles, using appropriate software, applying writing styles, authenticating work, distributing writing; and determining if business objectives were met.

PR graduates will be able to demonstrate written communication in a wide range of business contexts.
